FINAL ECLIPSE OF THE MULTI-RACIAL DREAM

WHAT WE THINK

on the month's news

Los Angeles: multi-racialism meets its nemesis

The wave of ferocious rioting, looting and burning that engulfed the American city of Los Angeles at the end of April was a source of shock to the world but it most definitely should not ever have been a cause for surprise.

The writing had been on the wall for a long time. In Los Angeles itself there were the riots in the Watts district in the late 1960s. In other parts of the United States there had been many racial disturbances over the years. And here in Britain there was the outbreak of mayhem that convulsed more than 40 towns and cities in 1981, followed by the Handsworth and Tottenham rioting in 1985. Racial conflagrations of smaller dimensions have been taking place in many parts of Britain ever since, but news of them has carefully been suppressed by the national press and broadcasting services.

Something on the scale of the Los Angeles outbreak had to take place somewhere or other, some time or other. In the case of the LA rioting a spark was provided by a controversial court verdict, but from all the information we have received this clearly was only a pretext; the hideous race war unleashed on the white community by mainly black and Hispanic criminal gangs would have occurred regardless of whether that verdict upset the Blacks or not — nothing like the Los Angeles inferno could have been spontaneous; clearly, behind it there was advance planning, as there always is in disorders of this kind. What kind of planning, and by whom, we may be able to ascertain as news filters through to us from our American contacts.

As predictable as the Los Angeles riot itself was the response to it by Britain's mass media. The media of course could hardly be seen endorsing the behaviour of the rioters, but the general tenor of their commentaries and analysis was that, in the circumstances, those rioters' anger and frustration were 'understandable'. In the first place, it was claimed, there was the disgraceful verdict of the court in acquitting the police officers charged with beating up Rodney King, the black motorist whom they stopped after a chase through the area last year. Then there was the underlying factor of much more general black discontent over the place of the Negro in American society. It was not enough, media pundits cried, to punish the rioters; steps had to be taken to deal with the root of the problem, which was the gross social and economic inequalities between America's racial groups, with the Blacks at the bottom of the pile.

All this of course is standard liberal knee-jerk reaction of the kind to which we have become well accustomed over the years. At the end of the day, of course, we would not argue with the liberal assertion that the problem must be dealt with at its roots. But how that should be done is another matter. To that theme we will return later.

The incident that sparked it

Taking first things first, it would certainly appear from the video film taken of the incident in which King was apprehended that the police officers involved used considerable force in dealing with him. Whether this force was excessive would depend on a number of factors which our media conveniently chose not to examine in their reporting of the affair. The video shown on British TV only illustrated the beating of King by the officers; it did not show what happened immediately beforehand. Was there film of what happened beforehand? Apparently there was, but none of us was permitted to see it. This film was shown to the court during the trial of the police officers, and apparently it was that which swung the jury in favour of a verdict that necessary force had been used by the officers. One paper in this country which, to its credit, printed details of this was the Sunday Express of May 3rd. In a report from its correspondent Tim Miles the paper quoted the testimony of a woman juror who had been one of the 12 who gave the not-guilty verdict. According to this juror, King had behaved with extreme aggression towards the police after his car had been stopped. He was 6ft 3in and weighed 16 stone, whereas it would seem that the officers were of average physique. Said the juror: "The whole video tape clearly showed what was going on. Rodney King was directing the action and could have stopped what was happening. The only time he lost control of the action was when he finally submitted to arrest. Even during the handcuffing he was still fighting."

Perhaps even more to the point was the testimony of a police officer that he and his colleagues had good reason to believe that King was acting under the influence of a drug known as PCP. Known on the street as 'Angel Dust', this drug gives almost super-human strength to those taking it. Said the officer: "There is nothing a police officer is frightened of more than a person on Angel Dust. They become like wild animals and take on extraordinary strength."

Some guide as to the motives of the officers in the incident can be gleaned from the fact that two other Blacks were present with King at the time of his arrest. They put up no resistance and were not harmed. Had the police been out to inflict injury on King just for the hell of it, or perhaps for some racial motive, surely these others would have got the same treatment.

The full tape was in the hands of the worldwide TV organisation Cable News Network (CNN) but, according to this report, "executives said it could not be shown in its entirety because of the poor quality of most of the footage." Whether this is true or not, it was certainly most convenient for those who sought to make a martyr out of King following the incident. Evidently the parts of the tape which were withheld from the world's TV viewers were distinct enough to have convinced the jurors that what actually happened was very different from what was alleged in most news reports.

It might be argued that the police officers involved, being professionals and presumably properly trained in dealing with this kind of incident, still did not need to inflict the number of blows they did on King to bring him under control. Maybe, but they were also human beings who quite clearly had had their patience stretched far beyond normal limits by the berserk behaviour of this outside Black. It is also quite possible that they were to some degree frightened for the safety of themselves and of each other. Armchair liberals, from the comfort of their drawing rooms, have little comprehension of the kind of atmosphere in which policemen have to carry out their duties in multi-racial hell-holes such as this part of Los Angeles. Would they respond with total self-composure if they were placed in a similar situation? One doubts it.

Of course, none of these considerations were allowed to enter into mass media treatment of the case, while for the most part the basic facts concerning King's behaviour prior to his beating were ignored.

Other questions unanswered

British TV, in its many reports and analyses which followed the Los Angeles rioting, seemed only to be able to find two types of people to interview. The overwhelming majority of these were black, while the remainder consisted of white liberals who quite clearly harboured a pro-black bias. Conspicuously absent from all such interviews and discussions were those 'Middle-America' Whites who are supposed to make up the majority of white society in the US and who might have been expected to have delivered against the rioters the unqualified condemnation that was their due. Virtually everyone the TV interviewers spoke to had some excuse or other for the orgy of destruction that had just taken place. BBC and ITV representatives reverently listened to repeated outbursts against the jurors in the King case without ever being so disrespectful as to suggest that, even had the latter been as wrong and as racially bigoted as it was alleged they were, could the thousands of ordinary white folk in the area who had had their properties set alight or looted, or had been picked on the street and beaten up, have been held in any way responsible for the jury's verdict? In our memory of all the reports, interviews and commentaries taking place, such a question was never raised. It was left to the ordinary TV viewer to deduce the obvious: that the attacks on these unfortunate folk were manifestations of pure, unadulterated anti-white racism. Of course, for people to draw these conclusions would have been entirely contrary to mass media policy, which is to get us all thinking that only Whites are ever 'racist' and that only non-Whites ever suffer

PUTTING THE BOOT IN

Los Angeles: When, as is seen happening here, a white man is on the ground and blacks are kicking him, the media call it 'understandable' frustration resulting from poverty and unemployment. When the roles are reversed and a Black is the victim, it is a 'racist attack'.

As to the implied whitewash of the rioters on the grounds of their 'justified anger' against the place of Blacks within American society, here of course we have a theme that liberals have been hammering at us as long as anyone can remember, not only in the context of the United States but also in that of our own country. In the case of the Los Angeles rioting, as so often before, black wage levels and living standards were cited as evidence of the 'unfair' relegation of Blacks to their positions of lower status. Nobody here seems prepared to consider the question of whether those levels might simply be nature's normal reward for the performance hitherto that Blacks have been capable of achieving. Just why is it, we would have to ask the liberals, that everywhere we look — whether it be in the USA, Britain, South Africa or anywhere else — these same inequalities exist? They are inequalities not suffered by other ethnic groups that have settled in all these countries, often beginning with linguistic disadvantages that do not apply to the majority of black people.

Indeed, it is a fact that in the United States Blacks have, by way of the policy of 'Affirmative Action', often been enabled to get jobs they would not have succeeded in getting had they had to compete with Whites on an equal basis. Any visitor to the US will be able to see the manifestations of this policy in the overwhelmingly black staff that are employed in numerous occupations. It is fair to say that today in America Blacks do better in getting jobs than they would do if those jobs were handed out solely on merit. So where is the foundation for the claim that they are relegated to the bottom rung of society in consequence of 'injustice'?

To delve any more deeply into this question of why Blacks, in one country after another, fail to succeed and achieve high living standards as Whites do would be to venture into areas of debate which, in Britain at least, are strictly circumscribed by legislation which could render one liable to prosecution and even imprisonment for saying the wrong thing. That itself is a symptom of the madness of our times that has put an end to all rational discussion of the race issue — a rational discussion that has been notably absent from the commentaries and analyses of what happened in Los Angeles. Suffice it to say here that Blacks, for whatever reason, cannot and do not compete equally in a white society. The whole history of inter-racial relationships in one country after another is proof of it. The time has come to stop agonising about this fact, least of all trying to skate around it or deny it, and to plan the future — whether it be America's future or Britain's future — in accordance with that overriding truth.

The lesson

The lesson of Los Angeles, as of other similar conflagrations in the United States, this country and elsewhere, is simply that multi-racialism does not work and will lead to yet more misery, conflict and destruction as long as we attempt to persevere in trying to make it work. This truth would have gained overwhelming acceptance a long time ago had it not been for strange forces of censorship and pressure operating within our

THE REAL MEANING OF 'POLITICAL CORRECTNESS'

JOHN TYNDALL looks behind a piece of phraseology in current fashion among media scribblers

THE TERM 'politically correct' (or PC, to give it its customary initials) has recently insinuated itself into popular jargon, particularly with journalists. It is, like many current fads of the English language, of American origin, but its transatlantic pedigree, and its obvious trendiness, do not necessarily render it unacceptable. It has quite a powerful capacity to convey a sense of the absurdity of something which most certainly should be stamped as absurd, namely that set of values, fashions, edicts and ways of thinking that issues forth from the ivory towers of the leftish-liberal intellectual establishment — that establishment that has created such modern heresies and taboos as 'racism', 'sexism', 'ageism' and many others of their kind, and urges upon us that this catalogue of unacceptable 'isms' should be outlawed from all places where decent people gather. To comply with this outlawing is to be 'politically correct'; to defy it is, by implication, to place oneself in need of obvious 'correction'.

The term also has potency because it conveys the moral pomposity of its champions and provides just that necessary whiff of coercive intent that lies behind their endeavours. We were accustomed, when hearing about those who fell foul of the system in Soviet Russia, to be told that they were accused of 'incorrect' attitudes — and of course we know what happened to them! The arbiters of 'political correctness' in today's western world would probably like to assign dissidents to the same fate if they could, but being realists most of them would settle for depriving such people of their employment and of course their access to any public platform from which they might contaminate society with their views.

All in all then, the phrase 'politically correct' has served a useful purpose in current debate, and we have not been above using it ourselves once or twice in these columns.

In this usage, however, there is a danger against which we should be on our guard. In casting the spotlight on the more obvious legions of the 'politically correct', we should not fall into the trap of imagining that they are the only menace of their kind — or indeed the greatest one. The vanguard of 'political correctness', which is to be found in the universities, on some left-wing local authorities and in the more manifestly left-inclined sections of the mass media, has two weaknesses that take some of the edge off its corrosive power: one is the blatant idiocy of its ideological stances, which is still recognised by most normal folk among the population; the other is the equally blatant intolerance with which it enforces its norms — an intolerance that gets the backs up of the majority of people and is therefore less dangerous than other forms of intolerance, which mask their intentions with greater stealth and subtlety.

It might indeed be asked, when we direct our opprobrium against the censors of what is 'politically correct': are we aiming at the right target?

THE RACE ISSUE

To explore this question in more detail let us look, for example, at the subject of race. To the known and recognisable exponents of 'political correctness' the mere thought of this topic is the cue for flights of lunacy of almost comic dimensions. Words like 'black-guard', 'blackmail', 'blacklist' and 'black-ball' must not be written or spoken because they are held to equate negritude with things unpleasant. 'Whitewash', 'lily-white' and even 'white Christmas' are deemed offensive to coloured people because they give whiteness agreeable connotations. The works of Shakespeare, Beethoven, Michelangelo and Dostoevsky are stigmatised as 'Eurocentric' and therefore must therefore not given any higher cultural recognition than 'Rasta' poetry, 'rap' music or the primitive carvings of 'Zimbabwean' image-makers. The catalogue is endless, and most readers will be able to supplement it with their own experiences of PC nuttiness.

But at least this all has the virtue of the obviously burlesque — something to laugh at except when one is on the receiving end of it, when it becomes odious to all but an eccentric minority.

Much more dangerous and damaging than the rabid anti-racist postures of PC left-wingers is the institutionalised anti-racism of those who occupy the 'moderate' centre of politics; for they prevail in government, they dominate the 'respectable' press and they constitute the majority in the educational profession as well as the clergy. It is they and their predecessors who have decreed: (1) that Britain should become a multi-racial country; (2) that the theory of race-equality should govern all decisions of state — and should indeed become one of the dominating religious dogmas of the modern age; (3) that anyone who dares put forward a contrary theory should be banned from hiring meeting halls across the land, given no footage in the newspapers nor any hearing on television, prohibited from expounding their point of view in any classroom, barred from holding any job in a wide range of key professions and, in cases where especially forthright language is used which might offend certain ethnic groups, flung into jail.

Among those who write newspaper articles condemning and ridiculing the cult of 'political correctness' are many who actively, or at least passively, co-operate in maintaining the conditions just described. They are part of the vast and almost all-powerful establishment which has ordained that non-racism — which is scarcely distinguishable from anti-racism — should be the attitude held by all moderate and respectable people. It is their position on racial matters which, at the end of the day, represents the ultimate in 'political correctness'.

The same conditions may be said to prevail in the United States, the original hatching ground of the PC movement. This was succinctly illustrated in an article by Dr. William L. Pierce in National Vanguard magazine* entitled 'The Destruction of the Academy'. Speaking of those in American schools and universities who had objected to some of the barmier manifestations of PC, he said:-

"The reaction...avoids attacking political correctness at its roots. In fact, it accepts the same axioms as its PC opponents do: namely the axiom of equality and the axiom of cosmopolitanism. It believes in 'diversity' and 'multi-culturalism' — in moderation, of course."

In moderation indeed! And ultimately it is political correctness in its more moderate form that is the most insidious enemy of truth and rationality in racial matters, for while the political correctness that goes under that name is still to some extent marginalised the much more all-embracing and all-pervasive political correctness which constitutes state policy is established right at the centre of the nation's thinking and goes unchallenged except by those consigned to the fringes of political life.

P.C. IN EDUCATION

A further example of the PC-versus-non-PC argument can be found in the current debate over race and schools. The point of view that would be officially designated as PC is the one which pushes for ethnic minorities to be regarded as special sections of the school population, with curricula of their own which separate them from the mainstream of school pupils. The same PC lobby also agitates, somewhat contradictorily, for Asian languages and Asian religious customs to become compulsory subjects for the white British majority in our schools.

PC educationalists insist that ethnic minority school pupils should receive schooling in the national heritage and cultures of their ethnic homelands and be encouraged still to regard themselves as nationals of those homelands when it comes to expression of their identity. But those same PC educationalists, in complete paradox, likewise insist that these same youngsters be accepted 100 per-cent as 'British' — when it comes to exercising their rights within the country that their families have settled.

These points of view, however, probably do not yet represent the majority consensus in the world of education, and they most definitely do not represent the consensus in the Conservative Party that has dominated British politics throughout the last two decades. According to this latter consensus, the members of the ethnic minorities are as British as are those of us whose ancestral roots in this country go back more than a thousand years. Education should be directed towards integrating them fully into British society as swiftly as possible, and curricula should not therefore allocate large periods of time, if any time at all, to education in minority cultures or religious customs. This, it will be remembered, was the viewpoint of the Bradford headmaster Ray Honeyford, who fell foul of his local PC-dominated education authority for expounding such heresies, and eventually was forced to resign his post. Honeyford, in the stand he made, became the darling of Conservative circles because of his advocacy of gleichschaltung among the different racial groups in British schools — in other words, the treating of Asian, West Indian and other 'ethnic' pupils as if they were as British as the rest of us.

But Honeyford's position in fact reflected what today is 'orthodox' thinking. This same thinking pervades Conservative (i.e. Government) policy at all levels and in all fields — or almost all. The Tories purport to be against Labour proposals for 'Positive Discrimination' (the British equivalent of America's 'Affirmative Action') in employment, whereby special favours are granted to members of ethnic minority groups in the granting of jobs. Tory rejection of this idea seems to be honoured at least as much in the breach as in the observance, as as a look at the shop and canteen staff at Heathrow Airport and a number of London's mainline railway stations will testify. However, the Tory principle would seem to be that non-white people should be treated exactly the same as white people when jobs are being handed out, the presumption here being that non-white people are, on average, just as fitted for any jobs as are white people — no more so, no less so. In other words, racial equality rules OK!

It is permissible within the mainstream of British politics to take the PC position on these matters, though it probably will not be the position taken by the majority. Equally, it is permissible to take the non-PC position, in which case one is most likely to find oneself in the majority ranks. What is most definitely not permissible is to suggest that the multi-racial society itself is wrong, that it does not work and that it should be ended by the separation of Britain's Whites and non-Whites and the resettlement of the latter in other parts of the world.

In as much as the concept of 'political correctness' is usually taken to imply a coercive mentality directed to enforcing conformity with certain established orthodoxies, together with a practice of outlawing all points of view that do not meet the conformity rule, it could surely be argued that political correctness on the race issue should be seen, not in the narrow context upheld by the 'anti-racist' crazies of the openly totalitarian left, but in the much broader context of public policy on multi-racialism as agreed upon by all the main political parties and upheld by the entire mass media — whose totalitarianism on the issue is nonetheless effective for being covert and quiet rather than overt and noisy.

'SEXISM'

Turning aside from race and looking at the question of relationship between the sexes, we find the same pattern at work. The straightforward PC approach is equally extreme and equally manifest in its absurdity. We must not use such terms as 'chairman', 'fireman', 'policeman', 'foreman' or 'spokesman' because that would assume that the individual in question must always be male, and that would be 'sexist' — i.e. belittling of women. Things have now reached the point where the clergy are urged not to use the pronouns 'He', 'Him' or 'His' when speaking of God. Equally unacceptable is the term 'Our Lord'. All, you see, imply that the Great Creator is male, and that would not do! This inane practice of altering the language to accommodate the PC zealots has been latched onto, probably quite unconsciously, by millions who would not admit to being PC in the strictest sense. Thus do we hear quite normal people speak of the 'chairperson', the 'policeperson', the 'spokesperson' and so on. Likewise, headmasters are now conventionally referred to as 'headteachers' because it must never be assumed that the senior staff member even at an all-boys school must necessarily be male.

But again, do these absurdities represent real 'political correctness' — or are they simply the more extreme expressions of a much more all-embracing political correctness which has become mainstream policy? At the root of the whole farcical business is the presumption that henceforth and for ever after men and women must be treated exactly the same. Women should have access to all the jobs traditionally performed by men, and vice versa. The Conservative Party, by choosing a woman to be its leader for 16 years, set the tone for this policy. The same party in government has placed women in combat units in the armed forces, sometimes even in positions of command, just as it has sanctioned the deployment of female police officers on riot duty. Feminism, while still sometimes held in derision while manifesting itself under that name, is tacitly recognised by its demands being met in almost every field of national policy in this day and age. Here we come back to Dr. Pierce's point about those who react against political correctness accepting the same axioms as their PC opponents do. In other words, within the framework of contemporary debate the quarrel between the PC and the non-PC is essentially one between different means to the same end, between different expressions of the same ideal, between strident intolerance and subtle persuasion. The conflict, in true ideological terms, is essentially a family tiff, no more.

Where the sexes are concerned, the true 'politically correct' attitude is the one which repudiates the time-honoured British and European tradition under which the chief role of womankind was seen as that of wife, mother and home-maker — with exceptions sometimes allowed but never encouraged — and the embrace of the madhatter doctrine of sexual equality, which has taken women into a world where they are supposed to compete with men, which has feminised the male species in that process and which — most alarmingly of all — has downgraded motherhood to the stage at which having children has become, to many, an irksome chore, with all that that portends for the biological survival of our race. This, like the doctrine of equality of the races, has become the entrenched philosophy of the ruling establishment of politics, the media, the academic world and the church. It is the orthodoxy to which all sensible and respectable people are expected to adhere. And those who dissent from it are deemed to be ignorant and reactionary bigots whose minds are trapped in the dark ages. As with dissenters on race, they are very rarely, if ever, allowed a platform because it is considered dangerous to permit the public to hear them! This, in true essence, is the current 'political correctness'. That which expresses itself in protests against words as such 'chairman', 'spokesman', etc. is just the same PC in its nuttier form.

And this mainstream PC is much more dangerous than the lunatic-fringe PC because it commends itself as right and reasonable to most normal people.

HOMOSEXUALITY

Just the same bedfellows can be found when we come to the question of homosexuality.

The officially acknowledged PC movement takes the homophile position to the point of being positively anti-heterosexual. Not only is it not nice to be against queers, even to use the word 'queer', it is politically incorrect to depict heterosexual relationships in books, articles, songs, poems or even everyday conversation as if they are any more normal than homosexual ones. Of course, that point of view does not commend itself to more than a deranged minority among the population, and there is no great danger that it will ever do so.

Much more dangerous, because much more widespread in its acceptance, is the idea that homosexuals should be treated just like everyone else in society, that they should be allowed to become popular heroes in the eyes of our young people, that they should be given knighthoods and that there is nothing at all wrong, least of all anything to worry about, in the fact that they are represented out of all proportion to their numbers in the worlds of journalism and broadcasting, as well as wielding wholly disproportionate influence in the arts.

This middle-of-the-road, liberalist attitude towards homosexuality is exemplified by Prime Minister Major, who was reported only two months ago as "signalling his support for equal opportunity for homosexuals, fuelling expectations of a free vote by MPs on reducing the age of consent for male homosexuals if he is returned to power." (Sunday Telegraph, 1.3.92). In the same report it was stated that Mr. Major had, in a personal statement, backed the relaunch of the Tory Campaign for Homosexual Equality (TORCHE), which seeks to reform laws that discriminate against lesbians and homosexual men. This report came shortly after the Premier had put out the red carpet for queer TV actor Ian McKellen, recently knighted, at 10 Downing Street.

Major's position, which reflects those adopted by perhaps millions of British people today, is the true 'politically correct' one. The extreme homo-centred, anti-heterosexual attitude of the left-wing fringe represents, again, only that of a marginalised minority, and it is one expressed in such obviously eccentric and off-putting forms that few are ever likely to embrace it. The argument, as with race and sexual equality, is simply between two wings of the same movement. The basic axioms are accepted by both.

The 'moderate' and 'orthodox' position on homosexuality today shares in common with the same attitudes on those other questions the fact that any politician taking up a position fundamentally opposed to this orthodoxy is likely to find himself barred from any of the highest national offices. This 'moderate' and 'orthodox' position is therefore the 'politically correct' one in as much as 'political incorrectness' in the face of it is dangerously beyond the pale.

THE LESS DANGEROUS FACE OF 'POLITICAL CORRECTNESS'

Far-left Labour MP Ken Livingstone, is seen here (left) at a 'Gay Rights' meeting, with former Labour candidate Peter Tatchell on the right. Tatchell is a self-acknowledged queer; Livingstone — as far as is known — is heterosexual but likes to be seen supporting the more extreme 'politically correct' causes. Public 'Gay Rights' activities, because of their loudness and because of involvement in them by controversial figures such as Livingstone and Tatchell, do not win much sympathy with the general British public. In its less obtrusive form, however, the 'Gay Rights' movement has the support of the Prime Minister and would therefore be seen by many as quite 'respectable'.

What is notable about the attitudes of the official and acknowledged PC lobby on all these questions is that by their very craziness, intolerance and eccentricity they render the more moderate attitudes on the same questions — that is to say the 'orthodox' and 'approved' attitudes of the day — normal, reasonable and respectable by comparison.

It is like administering to a man a particularly vile-tasting poison. After sampling it, he is likely to regard a poison with a milder taste, but equally virulent and deadly, as quite palatable.

It is the 'moderate', 'middle-of-the-road' attitudes on these topics that we have examined that today represent true 'political correctness'. Likewise 'politically correct' in our times are: Internationalism; Democracy; Free Trade; Aid to the Third World; the European Community; the United Nations; NATO; Modern Art and belief in the Holocaust. The supporters of these things are not regarded as 'extremists'; but opponents of any of them definitely are so. The fanatics who pursue advocacy of such orthodoxies to the furthest fringes merely serve as convenient decoys, distracting attention from the main front on which their advance is being promoted. We should not be deceived. PC is not at all what it appears. Its most evil intentions do not lurk behind its ugliest face.

THOUGHT FOR THE MONTH

The fight is being waged on all fronts, and the most insidious idea employed to break down society is an undefined equalitarianism. Such equalitarianism is harmful because it presents itself as a redress of injustice, whereas in truth it is the very opposite.

The comity of peoples in groups large or small rests not on this chimerical notion of equality, but on fraternity, a concept which long antedates it in history because it goes immeasurably deeper in human sentiment. The ancient feeling of brotherhood carried obligations of which equality knows nothing. It calls for respect and protection, for brotherhood is status in family, and family is by nature hierarchical.

Equality is a disorganising concept in so far as human relationships mean order. It is order without a design; it attempts a meaningless and profitless regimentation of what has been ordered from time immemorial by the scheme of things. No society can rightly offer less than equality before the law, but there can be no equality of condition between youth and age, or between the sexes; there cannot be equality even between friends. The rule is that each shall act where he is strong: the assignment of identical roles produces first confusion, then alienation, as we have increasing opportunity to observe.

At any given moment there is an orthodoxy, a body of ideas which it is assumed all right-thinking people will accept without question. It is not exactly forbidden to state this, that or the other, but it is "not done." Anyone who challenges the prevailing orthodoxy finds himself silenced with surprising effectiveness. A genuinely unfashionable opinion is almost never given a fair hearing, either in the popular press or in the highbrow periodicals.

IN A LEADING ARTICLE recently, The Economist warned us that "Racism's back." It begins: "Neo-Nazis in Germany, anti-semitism in Poland...a former Grand Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan running...for the governorship of Louisiana; from the Urals to the Ozarks, it seems, the scum is rising. It is time, once again, to contend with racism." Rousing stuff indeed. And there is more to come.

"Racism," we are told, "can and should be fought..." Potential victims of racism must know that "racist sentiments will be unequivocally condemned...Racism must never become respectable." In East Europe, we learn, racism "draws on ancient prejudices against Jews," and that "there is no good racism." The Economist feels that in East Europe the need is to use national feelings to build strong, tolerant societies rather than states "based on tribal exclusivity and a false feeling of superiority."

The Economist, fashionably liberal, states that "immigration is the life-blood of most nations. It invigorates the stock, brings enterprise..." and concludes with a flourish that "the hope for humanity lies in fusion, not fission."

Strong stuff. Clearly The Economist sees 'racism' as the ultimate evil, probably as bad as apartheid or élitism. One is tempted to seek at once for a racist to pillory at the bar of 'world opinion' or to hold up for the execration of the 'world community' — two useful figments of the liberal imagination. But perhaps we should heed St. Augustine's advice and "hear the other side" before calling for crucifixion of 'racists'.

So let us begin by asking just what a racist is. It is clear that to a liberal a racist is the most evil of men. But what is so evil in a racist's beliefs that he becomes 'scum' to a liberal?

The Concise Oxford Dictionary defines racism as "the theory that human abilities are determined by race." We are now in a position to translate the liberalspeak of The Economist into ordinary English. Thus the statement that "It is time, once again, to contend with racism" turns out to mean that "It is time once again to contend with those adhering to the theory that human abilities are determined by race." One wonders why it is so essential to 'contend' with these theorists. It is not impossible that the theory that human abilities are determined by race — or at least largely so — is scientifically correct. Why should a person who has studied some of the huge volume of scientific evidence on the subject, and has been convinced by what he has studied, at once by labelled 'scum' by liberals of the kind who write in The Economist? Why must the belief that abilities may be influenced by race be opposed by this kind of abuse? Would it not be more constructive, and certainly more democratic, to have the theory, and the scientific evidence supporting it, publicly debated, rather than just dismissing those holding this view as 'scum'?

"Racism," we are told, "must never become respectable." Thanks to the Concise Oxford Dictionary, we can translate this to mean that "the theory that human abilities are determined by race must never become respectable." But why not? What if the theory is proved to be true? Will that theory still remain not 'respectable'? If so, why?

The Economist tells us that "there is no good racism." This translates that "there is no good in the theory that human abilities are determined by race." But the theory itself is neither good nor bad. Like any theory invoking scientific argument, it may be correct or it may be incorrect. But it cannot be good or bad — that is to say it cannot be judged according to moral criteria. The way of applying the theory may be either good or bad, but that is another matter.

IN WHAT WAY SUPERIOR?

Another statement which, impeccably liberal as it is, is suspect is the one that speaks of "societies based on tribal exclusivity and a false sense of superiority." As it stands, the phrase, like so much of what liberals say, is meaningless. To give it meaning it is necessary to specify in what respect a society is claimed to be superior. Only then can one decide whether such a sense of superiority is justified.

Contd. overleaf

RACE

On left: a young woman from Norway; on right: a woman from the Sara-Kaba tribe near Lake Chad. To suggest that these women are fundamentally different is to be 'racist'. And people with 'racist' ideas, according to The Economist magazine, are 'scum' who must not be allowed to become respectable.

ABUSE SUBSTITUTED FOR ARGUMENT

If a North European people feel that they are superior to a Mongoloid people in the art of making the Westminster system of parliamentary government work, then history proves that they are undoubtedly right. On the other hand, there may be other fields of human activity in which such a sense of superiority would be unjustified. For instance, a North European who claimed that his race was superior to Negroes in sprinting, long-jumping or boxing would be talking obvious nonsense. For good measure, a Japanese who argues that his race can beat all comers in the field of bantam-weight wrestling is not labouring under "a false sense of superiority." He is speaking the truth, as a study of Olympic records will make plain.

In his 'politically correct' hatred of 'racism', the Economist writer gives that word a meaning that it does not have. Racism is, as we have noted, the theory that human abilities are determined by race. The belief that a given race is superior to another would have to be qualified by a stipulation as to in exactly what field it is superior.

With the passion for racial miscegenation that invariably marks your true liberal, The Economist writer states that "immigration invigorates the stock, brings energy, enterprise and vigour." Well, immigration may do these things — or it may not. A study of the facts seems to show that beneficial results to the accepting country follow only when the immigrants are racially assimilable and when, of course, they have energy, enterprise and skills to contribute. The industrious and educated Huguenots were of the same basic racial stock as the British people among whom they settled, and were thus readily assimilable. This was an example of an inflow which was beneficial; it was so successful in fact that today it is usually quoted as if it established a universal rule that all immigration is good — whereas it did nothing of the kind.

When Negroes were imported by the many thousands into Brazil it did no good at all. These immigrants did not bring 'enterprise' or 'energy'. The Negro in Brazil remains the low man on the racial totem pole. In Brazil the racial cocktail grows lighter in colour as one moves up the social and economic scale. Brazil today is an awful example of the harmful effect of immigration by unassimilable elements.

Nor will the facts support the argument that Negro or Hispanic (not Spanish but a mish-mash of Spanish, Indian and Negro strains) immigration has brought any benefits to the United States. A reading of the best-selling Bonfire of the Vanities will make this plain. Nobody in his right mind has argued that the appalling picture of a once-white American city centre into which non-Whites have moved indicates any 'invigoration' of such areas.

It is equally difficult to argue that the influx of Afro-Caribbeans has brought any benefits to Britain. This immigration has not done anything to improve the quality of life in such places as Toxteth, Notting Hill or Handsworth. Nobel Prizewinner Dr. William Shockley has stated: "I evaluate the marrow of the city slum problem to be our uncertainty about its genetic aspects and our fear to admit ignorance and to search openly for relevant facts." 'Slum problem', 'inner-city blight' and 'urban deprivation' are simply acceptable euphemistic code-words to indicate the presence of large numbers of immigrants.

The actual evidence is that immigration can be beneficial — sometimes and when certain conditions are met, but not otherwise.

ABUNDANT EVIDENCE

The dictionary has told us that 'racism' is the theory that human abilities are determined by race, and that 'racialism' is the belief that a given racial group is superior or inferior to another. Does science offer a guide? It does indeed. Whole shelves of books by such meticulous scientists as Gates, Coon, Carothers, Vint, Shuey, Darlington,

Baker and scores of others all tend to show that human races differ in almost all mental, physical and spiritual aspects, that these differences can be quantified and that, with due allowance for the inevitable overlap, the differences are explicable only in terms of race.

A student of the evidence assembled by these painstaking scientists may be mistaken in believing what he reads. He may be a dupe; but he certainly is not 'scum' nor someone always to be denied the right to be heard, as is current practice. It seems likely that T.S. Eliot was thinking of this liberal censorship and its bland refusal to consider any other point of view when he wrote:-

"The struggle of our time is to concentrate, not to dissipate...to re-establish a vital connection between the individual and the race. It is, in a word, a struggle against liberalism."

Malcolm Muggeridge was of the same opinion when he wrote that:-

"Liberalism will be seen historically as the great destructive force of our time... Compared with the long-term consequences of a Gilbert Murray, a Bertrand Russell, a Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Hitler was an ineffective dreamer, Stalin a Father Christmas and Mussolini an Arcadian Shepherd."

BEATING THE JAPS AT THEIR OWN GAME

GARY GALLO proposes a policy for winning the trade war

This article first appeared under the title 'Can Protectionism Work Against Japan?', and was published in The Nationalist, obtainable from PO Box 30505, Knoxville, Tennessee 37930, U.S.A. We reprint it here because we think it should be of particular interest to British readers, containing an analysis and proposals very similar to those we have put forward concerning the troubles of industry in this country.

IN JANUARY President Bush, escorted by the presidents of the Big Three US auto-makers, went to Japan to beg the Japanese to stop kicking the poor car-makers around any more. The Japanese political leadership politely refused the offer that Japan commit hara-kiri and suggested that the problem was an American one and that Bush and Congress should do what is in the best interests of the US and that they continue to do what is in the best interests of Japan. This is a novel idea and a very disturbing notion for the internationalist capitalist cabal that rules America. For if Japan refuses to play by the rules of international capitalism the US will be forced to abandon the system of 'free trade' or find itself stripped of its manufacturing

INFANT INDUSTRIES

Not so long ago it was America that refused to play by the rules. In the 19th century the US, and later Germany, established strong tariff barriers to protect their infant industries from competition coming from the dominant trading and manufacturing power of the day — Great Britain. The British made all the standard capitalist arguments one hears now from US economists about how free trade helps everybody by restricting production in specific terms to those countries which produce the item most efficiently — the doctrine of comparative advantage, as it is called by the 'scientists' of macro-economics.

But the Americans and Germans were not interested in universal world efficiency; rather they wished to build their own national political, economic and military power, and they needed to build a manufacturing base to accomplish this mission. Their economic policy was not seen as an end in and of itself but was used as a tool to accomplish their political objective. Once their power base was secure they could then take the British on at their own game and beat them.

Under protectionist policies the American and German economies expanded with extraordinary rapidity, and the British economy declined with equally amazing speed. Yet the British to this day still trumpet the virtues of capitalist free trade, apparently having learned nothing from their experience, and there is an historical reason for this.

FREE FALL

According to capitalist theory, British companies should have responded to the increasingly sophisticated techniques of their competitors by improving their performance. But the ineptitude of the British managerial class and the bitter labour-management struggle in the country prevented an adequate response to the competition (just as in present-day America). As British firms became less efficient and less profitable, the British capitalist class sought to shift its wealth outside the country to wherever a better return awaited itself — which further accelerated Britain's decline.

Where did the money go? After the First World War it went primarily to the great new champion of international free trade: the United States of America. Even great British 'patriots' such as Winston Churchill invested their money in America rather than in Britain in the 1920s and 1930s; and the process continues to the present day, which is why the British ruling class still promotes the doctrine of free trade, even though Britain has been wrecked by it and can never recover without an intelligent protectionist policy.

The wealthy Anglo-Saxons simply did not and do not care about what happens to their country as long as they can get good returns

JAPANESE MONOPOLY
This is a factory in Japan making video cassette recorders. Jap firms have captured the US market from American VCR-makers on their investments overseas, whether it be in Canada, America, Switzerland or Germany. The present world domination of international capitalism allows the rich to shift their money to whatever country presents the most attractive short-term opportunities. Indeed most of the biggest companies in the world are now fully international, with stock-holders, directors and officers coming from a multitude of countries. Even some Japanese companies are beginning to move in this direction as a result of their managerial and capitalist classes becoming more and more immersed in the internationalist milieu.

JAPANESE AMBIVALENCE

But the Japanese attitude towards capitalist free trade has always been ambivalent ever since Perry's American fleet imperialistically forced Japan to open up and trade with the rest of the world. They learned from the experience of Germany that infant industry had to be protected, but as an island nation without natural resources Japan was compelled to import and export in order to build a manufacturing industry. Now Japan has a huge international trading apparatus — plus the old protectionist attitudes and policies, which prevent penetration of most of its markets by foreigners, and this causes enormous resentment in the US, which has a $41 billion trading deficit with Japan and which finds its manufacturing base diminishing under the pressure of Japanese, as well as European, competition.

The answer, however, is not to rail at the Japanese for doing things right and serving their own national interest. Such unseemly whining will fail to produce any positive result. What America must do is rebuild its manufacturing base and protect its new infant industries in an intelligent fashion rather than in some knee-jerk Smoot-Hawley-type bill, which will only serve to trigger another international trade war just as the first such bill did in the early 1930s.

The problem is no longer simple because our basic markets are already deeply penetrated. For example, the head of the huge Dutch firm Philips Consumer Electronics has said that the US did not even fight for its consumer electronics industry; it simply gave it up to the Japanese. The owners of American consumer electronic manufacturing companies decided they could make a better return on their dollar by selling their plants to the Japanese and shifting their capital into the service sector, where they do not have to compete with the Japanese and Germans (at least for the time being). So now there is not a television or VCR sold in the US that is manufactured by an American-owned company. Thus it would be stupid to place tariffs and/or quotas on consumer electronic products, as this would only raise the price of these items to American retailers and consumers without shifting any sales to American manufacturers — because there are none.

PHASED BARRIERS

The same situation exists in computer chips and many other products. So the Government must first establish, or encourage the establishment of, infant industries in these areas, i.e. computer chips, consumer electronics, etc., and then erect phased barriers to protect them so that they can expand rapidly without the price of the products being forced upward. For example, if five million televisions are normally sold in the American market in one year and new American companies can only produce one million then it would be counter-productive to establish quotas or tariffs that would prevent the Japanese from supplying the other four million or would cause them to sell those other four million at inflated prices.

The most crucial area of trade conflict is clearly the auto industry — as 75 per-cent of the $41 billion trade deficit with Japan is in automobiles and auto parts, and Japanese-owned companies now control 30 per-cent of the American car market. But protecting American auto companies is a two-edged sword. The Big Three have abandoned small car manufacturing as the result of a flawed business philosophy. Under capitalism the object is to maximise profit and percentage return on investment. The profit margin on small cars is very small compared with that on large cars, and even the total amount of profit is greater on large cars than on small cars — despite the fact that many more small cars are sold than large cars. So the American auto-makers long ago decided not to put too much design or research and development into small cars, essentially abandoning the small car market to the Japanese — who have a very different corporate philosophy, which stems from nationalism rather than capitalism.

NATIONALIST BUSINESS PHILOSOPHY

In Japan the size, importance and greatness of a company are not measured by its percentage profit or even its total profit, but rather by its number of workers. This is because maximum employment is seen as a great social utility and is thus the primary mission of the Japanese business owner. Hence the Japanese corporation seeks maximum volume, and secures it through minimum mark-up. This ensures maximum employment.

Another facet of this philosophy is that in Japan, particularly in the retail and service sectors, company payrolls are bloated with service people — people who open doors for you, or who operate the elevators, or who answer questions or who get your problems and complaints resolved quickly. This is part of the Japanese business philosophy of providing maximum quality (in this case the best service possible) but it is also part of an effort to keep everyone employed, and the Japanese are apparently willing to pay higher domestic prices to obtain greater service and its attendant employment.

THE COMPLICATIONS

Full employment being the goal, the Japanese were delighted to take the small car market away from the Americans, and the American auto-makers were equally pleased to give it to them and be rid of it — because it looked bad on the books as it reduced percentage profit. The higher the percentage profit the higher go executive salaries, so now the Big Three have all formed partnerships with the Japanese to produce their small cars. This fact, and the fact of Japanese-built and -owned auto-manufacturing plants in the US greatly complicates protectionist policy. Any attempt to limit the number of cars imported from Japan would only result in greater sales for the Japanese plants in America, as they are selling superior products, and often at lower prices, than their Big Three competition. Moreover, every effort to increase the volume of car sales for American companies can only benefit the Japanese, as they build the small cars that sell in the highest volume.

THE SOLUTION

The solution is a nationalistic ownership policy combined with a nationalistic business philosophy. The American auto-makers must buy out their Japanese partners and regain their small car-manufacturing base. Moreover, they must buy out the plants built and owned by the Japanese in the US, and if the auto-makers are unwilling to do these things the US Government should buy out the plants and set up new worker-owned auto companies to compete with the Big Three out of the ultra-modern plants obtained from the Japanese.

Secondly, the the automobile manufacturers must adopt a business philosophy of maximum quality at minimum price — otherwise the people will demand the return of Japanese products and Japanese companies. They will not support the old capitalist rip-off any longer, not now that they have been exposed to a different way of doing business.

NATIONALIST PROTECTIONISM

Once a nationalistic ownership policy and a nationalistic business philosophy are adopted, then and only then will protectionist trade policy work to guard the American auto industry and other threatened and reborn industries until they have improved performance to the point where they no longer need protection. The alternative is to complain fruitlessly to the Japanese, thereby raising the anger level of both sides, to go to war with Japan and again destroy it, or to wait and hope that that country goes into an internal decline.

At present, the Japanese are nationalists first and capitalists second, and, though there is mounting evidence that capitalist corruption is on the rise in the Japanese political and business leadership, waiting for that corruption sufficiently to worm the wood such as to cause Japan's collapse is certainly tempting fate. We do not have that kind of time, and in any case it is better to think of ways to start doing things right — for a change.

ONE MAN'S STAND AGAINST STUDENT INSANITY

Spearhead reports Andrew Lightfoot's courageous battle at his college at Egham

ONE STUDENT representing the British National Party on his campus has provoked a reaction tantamount to a wave of hysteria — merely by daring to challenge the gospel of multi-racialism that permits no dissent in student politics.

The student is Andrew Lightfoot and his college is the Royal Holloway and Bedford New College at Egham, Surrey.

On October 21st 1991 — the anniversary of the Battle of Trafalgar — Mr. Lightfoot won a great moral victory at an 'anti-fascist' meeting organised by the college's Student Union. The meeting was addressed by Ray Hill.

Mr. Hill, who usually enjoys an evening's Britain-bashing, promised the assembled students, most of whom were leftists, that Britain would soon become a full-blown multi-racial, multi-cultural country — "whether the BNP likes it or not." He ended his speech by calling on the radical left to "smash the BNP."

Not surprisingly, in view of the political complexion of the audience, Mr. Hill received a standing ovation.

But the voice of racial suicide was in for a bit of a shock. As the clapping died down, Andrew Lightfoot challenged Hill to explain why he was promoting policies that would lead to the destruction of the British race — a valid question of course, but one which spoiled Mr. Hill's evening.

There was a deep hush until, predictably,

Hill exploded with rage. "You're an ignorant bastard!" he shouted.

Most of the audience was angered by Mr. Lightfoot's question, so he had to be escorted from the meeting by a security guard.

During the next few days, a 'Students Against Fascism' society was formed at the college, and a petition was circulated around the campus demanding that Andrew Lightfoot be thrown off his degree course.

"Racist comments spark campus fury; racial hatred row at Royal Holloway" — so screamed the headlines in the student press.

Sadly for the clique of leftists who control the college's Student Union, only 600

FACILITIES BAN

To get back at Mr. Lightfoot, the Students Union has got him banned from using its facilities for the duration of his course. The conditions of the ban were that it should last for two terms and thereafter until he had apologised for his 'racist' statement. This he flatly refused to do, and so the ban is effectively permanent.

But the recipient of all this victimisation is managing to keep his nerve. In an interview with the Egham & Staines News, Mr. Lightfoot said: "I have no intention of leaving the college. I will be here for three years and intend to get a good degree."

Andrew Lightfoot's experiences at his college show in microcosm the atmosphere of madness in which student politics are conducted in most places of higher education in Britain — an atmosphere undiminished after 13 years of Tory Government and frequent condemnations by leading Tories of left-wing student militancy.

Typical of the reactions to Mr. Lightfoot's challenge to Ray Hill was a headline which appeared in the Egham Sun, the college's student paper, immediately afterwards, "Outrage," the headline yelled. A report followed which said that: "Feelings are now running high around campus as students demand action." The report went on to announce the formation of the 'Students Against Fascism' society and the anti-Lightfoot petition, which stated that "Andrew Lightfoot represents a threat to students on campus..." This latter assertion, made against one single individual in a college of 3,800 students, is of course quite laughable, but it is not untypical of the hype that has followed Mr. Lightfoot's stand.

ATTEMPTED INTIMIDATION

One of Mr. Lightfoot's most vociferous opponents is one Simon Rahamin (of what ethnic origin we are not informed). Mr. Rahamin decided that it was appropriate to broadcast to students at the college the room number of Mr. Lightfoot — which appalled even some of those who agreed basically with his opposition to the BNP man. Asked whether Mr. Lightfoot was only exercising his right of free speech, Rahamin replied: "I fully believe in the right to freedom of speech. However, there have to be certain limitations, i.e. that a speaker should not incite racial hatred or violence against anyone else. In these cases that right should be denied." It was not explained where, in a statement which simply opposed policies that would lead to the destruction of the British race, Mr. Lightfoot was inciting racial hatred, least of all violence, against anybody. It is understood that in his statement against Hill Mr. Lightfoot used the term 'mongrelisation', and to this in particular his opponents took offence. But the dictionary simply refers to the word 'mongrel' as meaning 'mixed breed' and to

'mongrelise' as to contrive the mixture of breeds. To claim that this amounts to an attack on any race or breed is to turn the language upside down.

The next local figure to join the campaign of hysterics against Mr. Lightfoot was Spelthorne Councillor Mark Hayhurst, Labour candidate in last month's general election for Surrey North West. Mr. Hayhurst called for a "close monitoring," of Mr. Lightfoot, whatever that might mean, and he went on to say that "There can be no place for the British National Party and their propaganda in our universities." Why not? The BNP represents a political viewpoint in what is supposed to be a free society. No-one is obliged to agree with it or support it if they don't want to, but it is a viewpoint that people are entitled to voice and to hear.

Similar twaddle came from a member of the college staff, Principal Professor Norman Gower, who said: "It is very sad to see the spectre of racism souring the atmosphere. In any form, hatred is a pernicious cancer which must not be allowed to spread."

Some would reply to Professor Gower that a much more pernicious cancer is the tendency of trying to silence a man for opinions one does not agree with and victimising him in the process.

Exceeding the demented ravings even of these two was the chairman of the 'Students Against Fascism' society, a Mr. David Gold, who in a letter to the paper London Student said: "I intend that Lightfoot should be punished in the most severe manner for the intimidation, fear and outrage he has caused students of this college." Comment would seem superfluous!

ENORMOUS IMPACT

The publicity won by Andrew Lightfoot for the BNP as a result of this affair has been enormous. The case has occupied many columns in such papers as the London Student, the Egham & Staines News and particularly the Egham Sun, which in its issue for November 4th 1991 gave nearly five whole pages to the episode, including two full pages to an interview with Mr. Lightfoot. While interspersed with sneering comments throughout, this feature did at least enable the BNP man to get over a great deal of party policy as well as his own opinions.

Andrew Lightfoot's stand at Egham has shown what can be accomplished on campus by a BNP representative of intelligence and courage. He is to be congratulated on the uncompromising fight he has put up at his college for free speech and rational debate against all the massed frenzy of the left-wing bullyboys. He has shown that raising the BNP banner at these places is not an impossible task. It can be done by those who have the gumption to give it a go.

The British National Party has now generated such interest and support at universities and colleges that the party leadership has decided on the formation of a special BNP student body, which will co-ordinate its activities in that field. This will be officially inaugurated some time later this year. Watch these columns for details!

LORD REITH WOULD NOT BE AMUSED!

Politics and Sociology masquerading as 'Genetics' lower the tone of the Reith Lectures, as JAMES MOTTRAM reports

Quotations appearing in the following article are taken from edited transcripts of the Reith Lectures published in The Independent at weekly intervals beginning on the 14th October 1991.

THE LAST in the series of six Reith Lectures given by Dr. Steve Jones, Reader in Genetics at University College London, was delivered over BBC Radio in December 1991. Since these lectures are a venerated feature of the liberal establishment aimed at a self-styled 'intelligentsia', it is hardly surprising that they amount to strenuous exercises in mind-manipulation. Indeed, one would have to be very naive to take seriously much of what they say.

Dr. Jones has relatively little to say on the subject of experiments in Genetics. What we are in fact offered under the title of the Reith Lectures is a rag-bag of bits of useless information of the kind usually banded about by sociologists, the separate bits having little relevance to each other or to anything else. Since such people as Dr. Jones rarely have any adequate knowledge of basic arithmetic, one should not be astonished if, whenever they are condescending enough to supply anything in the way of statistical data, they arrive at conclusions precisely the opposite of what such data imply.

On the whole, Dr. Jones prefers to dispense with evidence of any kind and, presumably by a process of intuition, arrives at conclusions which, in his own words, are described as 'startling' — when to more critical minds they appear simply mystifying or absurd.

From the first of his lectures we hear that:-

"...the new Genetics...has also given us a unique and startling insight into...what sex, age and death really mean,"

It is therefore with some disappointment that we hear the Doctor say in the second of his lectures that, after all:-

"...we do not really know what sex is for... It means that a female must waste her time producing sons..."

Such a remark must come as something of a shock to those mothers — not necessarily Asian in origin — who regard female children as unavoidable waste material in the effort to bear sons. Perhaps some confusion derives from the enigmatic statement in the first lecture to the effect that:-

"...our genes...suggest, for example, that men and women have a different history that may stretch back to a time before the origin of agriculture."

Fortunately for the survival of the human races, men and women would seem to have had much of their history in common.

Of 'startling' impact (and irrelevance) in the first lecture is the claim that:-

"Eighteenth century England had a substantial black population..."

CONFUSION ON RACE

It is on the subject of race that Dr. Jones appears to be most sadly and seriously confused, although one would have suspected from the beginning of his series of lectures that he is determined to come to grips with it. In his fifth lecture he asserts boldly that:-

"Modern Genetics shows that there are no distinct groups within humanity."

And three sentences on he elucidates as follows:-

"Humanity can be divided into groups in many ways...Each division depends to some extent on prejudice and, because they do not overlap, can lead to confusion."

Leaving aside the atrocious grammar here, one can only protest that surely groups that do not overlap are distinct groups. Is it not possible that Dr. Steve Jones is the one who is confused?

Nevertheless, Dr. Jones continues to be resolute in his theories, and it would appear from his discourse that those generations of fastidious scientists who have defined, categorised and compared human races have wasted their time — since Dr. Jones has clearly established that such different races do not exist! Men of unquestionable genius — Darwin, Nietzsche, Francis Galton — all regarded with patronising sympathy by the Reader in Genetics at University College London, are identified by him as simple-minded researchers unwittingly employing their talents in order to give scientific credibility to social and political prejudices which he believes to have been universally accepted in an age of imperialism. What causes Dr. Jones the deepest feelings of shame and regret is that these same men of genius, by failing to realise that coloured races are invariably clever, virtuous and peace-loving, may have sanctioned the abuse and exploitation of the Negro by White Europeans — since to Dr. Jones it would appear self-evident that such abuse has in fact occurred!

Whilst it would seem to be inconsistent with everything else he has to say on the subject of race and the mixing of populations by intermarriage, there is one comment in Dr. Jones' final lecture which is indeed 'startling' — and truly devastating in its implications. This is when he says:-

"It will take a long time before the mixing is complete — as much as 500 years to even out the genetic differences between England and Scotland, and perhaps even longer to get rid of their cultural difference."

Even if one is prepared to countenance the horrors of miscegenation and "getting rid of their cultural difference," one wonders how long it would take for the genes of the English and the Scots to become indistinguishable from the rest of that single variety of soup in which some of the ingredients will be African and Asian!

Since he is so obviously adept at rushing in where Angels fear to tread, and having justly (in his own opinion) derided great intellects of the past, Dr. Jones would no doubt be equally willing to take issue with one of his contemporaries, Professor H.J. Eysenck, who was indeed at one time Professor of Psychology at Dr. Jones' own university. Undoubtedly the most distinguished psychologist of his generation, Eysenck reached conclusions deriving from a lifetime of rigorous scientific research which would be anathema to Dr. Jones and the legions of sociologists incapable of understanding the methods involved in making reliable comparisons between individuals and between racial groups. In two masterly texts, Race, Education and Intelligence and Crime and Personality, Professor Eysenck has given the definitive view of the importance of heredity in determining the nature of human behaviour, and he would be surprised indeed to learn from the remarkable insights of Dr. Jones that racial identity, like genetically determined behaviour, was a mere figment of the imagination, or that, in the words of Dr. Jones himself:-

"Most of the work on inherited differences in intellect between races is contemptible, and much of the rest is wrong."

PHYSICAL ASSAULT

Such a statement, though demonstrably absurd, is certainly prudent. On one occasion when Eysenck was about to deliver a lecture revealing the importance of measurable difference in the context of race

GENERAL ELECTION

As polling day nears, three party leaders show they know where the power lies!

DURING THE RUN-UP to the recent general election an item appeared in a newspaper that the vast majority of British voters most certainly never read. The paper was the Jewish Telegraph. It is published in Manchester and it caters for people of the Jewish persuasion, mostly in the North of England. It is a pity that non-Jews do not read this paper, for if they did it might make them think deeply and seriously about their rulers.

Page 21 of the issue published for March 27th was entirely devoted to a feature headed 'Election Special'. In this feature the heads of the three main political parties were invited to send messages to Britain's Jews. What they said was interesting, to say the least.

John Major, speaking for the Tories, began his message with the words: "I am grateful for this chance to speak to the Jewish community. For I have a high regard for the Jewish community in this country, its ideals and its achievements. And I am particularly conscious of the fact that the horrendous wounds inflicted on Jews the world over by the Holocaust have yet fully to heal."

A little further down Mr. Major said that: "The Government is wholly committed to the survival of the state of Israel within recognised and secure borders. On that we will not budge."

And: "I hate all forms of racism and racial discrimination. The Conservative Government has been vigorous in its enforcement of the Race Relations Act... We also brought in the Public Order Act of 1986 to stop racial attacks and the whipping up of all racial hatred."

For the Labour Party, Neil Kinnock said, as if echoing Major: "Under Labour, Britain's relationship with Israel would be one of friendship and support. Our Manifesto includes a clear commitment to the security of the State of Israel."

Further on, the Labour leader gave an ominous hint of things to come when he said: "The next Labour Government will strengthen and expand the scope of anti-racism legislation in Britain..."

Kinnock stressed his commitment to multi-racialism by saying that: "...we respect the customs and beliefs of Britain's diverse communities. We rejoice in the richness they bring to our culture and society."

Common values

And further on: "...this general election is about more than policies; it's about values. The Jewish community has in the past set an example to us all. The values at the heart of the Jewish faith... are Labour's values." (Didn't Mrs. Thatcher once say the same of the Tories?)

Paddy Ashdown, speaking for his party, stated that: "There are strong links between the Anglo-Jewish community and the Liberal Democrats. There are many Jews in leading positions in our party and standing as candidates in this election."

And: "Our stand against racism and anti-semitism is as strong now as it has ever been... Anti-semitism and fascism continue to rear their ugly heads in Europe. We are unfortunately not free of this disease in Britain. Racism must be fought and conquered wherever it appears."

And, as if to out-anti-racist Labour: "The Liberal Democrats will create new racial attacks squads to co-ordinate police action against racially motivated attacks..."

And on Israel: "I hope that the current peace talks will produce long lasting peace in the Middle East and a guarantee of security for the State of Israel. The Liberal Democrats have an active Friends of Israel association..." (so also have the Tory and Labour parties).

As Arthur Daley would say, all strictly kosher!

+ ELECTION SPECIAL + ELECTION SPECIAL + ELECTION SPECIAL + ELECTION SPECIAL

By JOHN MAJOR
Prime Minister and
Leader of the Conservative Party

I AM grateful for this chance to speak to the Jewish community.

For I have a high regard for the Jewish community in this country, its ideals and its achievements.

And I am particularly conscious of the fact that the horrendous wounds inflicted on Jews the world over by the Holocaust have yet fully to heal.

I believe in an open society where men and women can go as far as their talent, ambition and sheer effort take them. I want to build up all artificial barriers of artificial religion and race.

My aim for Britain is an opportunity society where people can better themselves and their families by their own work. I want a Britain that gives people choice and control over their own lives, where they take responsibility for themselves and their families, recognising always that we have responsibilities also to our neighbours and to those whose lives are not always as fortunate as ours.

I know how difficult the recession has been. But we have now put in place the ingredients for recovery especially lower inflation, now lower than in Germany, and lower interest rates.

Conservative economic policies including our tax policies will encourage recovery. Labour's programme to impose the biggest increase in personal tax since the war, to give power back to the trade unions and to renege on its promises to create new jobs and secure borders.

The Government is wholly committed to the survival of the State of Israel within recognised and secure borders. On that we will not budge.

I believe that the peace talks started in Madrid last October

Our commitment to Israel's survival offer a real hope of achieving this aim of bringing peace and prosperity to the whole of the Middle East.

We are a party to the negotiations. But we very much hope they will succeed. And we will do all we can whenever the opportunity presents itself, to support and advance the process.

If the current peace talks are to succeed, as I want them to, then there is a need to preserve the careful balance on Palestinian representation established at Madrid.

As your readers know, there have been contacts with the PLO at senior official level. But no decision has been taken to resume ministerial talks.

We believe that a successful outcome to the present peace process is in Israel's greatest and long term interest.

The establishment of new settlements in those territories is not calculated to advance the peace process.

We oppose the Arab trade boycott wholeheartedly. We do not want Israel isolated.

That is not the way for the international community to help to bring peace to the Middle East.

But we do not believe it is right to bring in legislation to ban all boycotts. Legislation by its nature would have to be general and not particular. And this is something that industry itself does not want.

Our track record is proven. The Government of Israel knows us and trusts us. We proved our commitment to freedom in the Gulf War.

It was a Conservative Government which took effective action to drive Saddam Hussein out of Kuwait.

I hate all forms of racism and racial discrimination. The Conservative Government has been vigorous in its enforcement of the Race Relations Act. This makes all discrimination unlawful in employment, education, housing and training.

We also brought in the Public Act 1986 to stop racial attacks and the whipping up of all racial hatred.

Taken together these laws make Britain's protection for its minority groups one of the firmest in Europe.

The Commission for Racial Equality has a duty to review the workings of the Race Relations Act, and its next report is due later this year. It will in particular assess the potential for extending the Act to cover religious discrimination. We look forward to getting this report.

We have all been greatly alarmed and distressed by recent outbreaks of anti-Semitism in Europe.

The liberation of Eastern Europe has inevitably brought much turmoil in its wake. We want to help to bring stability and prosperity to the countries of the former Soviet Union.

Peace, stability and rising standards of living will together help to suppress extremism. We must remain ever-vigilant.

The General Election cut short the passage of the Asylum Bill through Parliament and it did not become law.

But the problem remains and will have to be tackled in the new Parliament.

It is the number of those applying for asylum in the United Kingdom is now nearly 50,000 a year — ten times the annual rate three years ago. And our present system just cannot cope.

We now have a backlog of 60,000 applications, and decisions are taking up to three months in a few weeks time.

Moreover, only one quarter of all those now asking for asylum have been recognised as genuine refugees. The rest are defined by the United Nations as people with a "well founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion."

These we want to go on helping. And we are deeply sensitive, in deed as well as word, to the plight of refugees the world over. We are now spending more than £60 million a year on help to refugees.

We are totally committed to giving all parents the maximum choice of school for their children, and to enable them to help run their children's schools.

That choice includes all religious schools which have already made such a proud contribution to the rich variety of our education.

All such schools can get grants in aid on the sensible condition that they meet the standards of the national curriculum.

It is the number of those applying for asylum in

As part of our increased support for grant maintained schools, we have given them the right to propose their own enlargement, and to seek to make the changes in their character.

By the start of the summer term in a few weeks time there will be over 200 grant maintained schools attended by over 150,000 children. And we reckon that, following a Conservative win on April 9, another 2,000 schools will apply for grant maintained status.

The care of the elderly is the test of a civilised society. Government spending on state pensions has gone up nearly 30 per cent in real terms since 1979, and the pension has been protected against inflation. We will continue to give it the total protection.

Nearly nine out of ten pensioners now have a second income on top of their state pension. That is why it is so important that our tax policies protect the income. That means defeating inflation for good.

Jewish Care and all charities benefit from special tax concessions, and we continue to do so.

In addition we have made a start through the system to encourage greater contributions to charity. We shall explore new ways of promoting this.

Many people interested in animal welfare are concerned about the religious slaughter of animals. We recognise the requirements of some orthodox religious groups in this area, and we think it would be wrong to impose a party line on what is an issue of conscience.

Of course, a general election is about more than policies; it's about values. The Jewish community has in the past set an example to us all. The values at the heart of the Jewish faith — care, compassion, mutual aid — are Labour's values. We reject the Conservative morality that looks no further than one's own interest. Our values promote a change.

A change from recession to recovery. A change from fear to hope. A change from the politics of envy to the ethics of community.

It's time for that change, and it's time for Labour.

involved in developments in the Middle East.

I recently met the new chief Rabbi and had a very positive exchange of views. I hope that this dialogue will continue.

At this election, the Liberal Democrats are offering something different. We believe that our political system has to change if we are to create a successful economy for the future.

We must enter wholeheartedly into the new Europe. We must try to stem the selfishness that has been fostered over the last 13 years and restore a caring society. We must protect our environment.

Here the duty is not only to ourselves but also to our children and grandchildren.

What Britain needs is not another government of decline and failure but a government committed to real change, and determined to start the long process of reconstruction and reform in Britain.

So there is a clear choice facing the British people at this election. Vote Labour or Tory, and things will stay the same.

Or start to change Britain for good with the help of the Liberal Democrats.

By NEIL KINNOCK
Leader of the Labour Party

THIS general election is a choice between a Conservative Government paralysed by recession and a Labour Government ready and determined to build recovery.

It's a choice between two visions of Britain. Britain needs a Government with a clear sense of direction and purpose. We need a strong Government that will get Britain working again. We need a recovery that lasts.

Anyone in Britain who uses a hospital, has children at school, uses public transport, is concerned about rising crime and the state of the environment, believes the Poll Tax to be unjust, and believes our society can be made more open and more democratic will know that a vote for Labour is a vote that will bring beneficial change to our country.

That's what we offer to all the people of Britain — at every community — at this election.

We want to ensure that every man, woman and child gets the chance to bring out the best in themselves.

We know that the only way to get Britain out of recession in the short term and build economic strength for the future is for industry to make the goods and services that people at home and abroad want to buy. We will get Britain out of recession by helping business do business.

Our commonsense policies for economic recovery — investment incentives for business, education and training for our people, private finance for the modernisation of British Rail — were set out in John Smith's Budget last week.

They build on Britain's strengths, and they know their own interests as well as the country's interests are best served by investment in our industry, by improvements in the Health Service, by fighting crime, and by building new homes.

The next Labour Government will strengthen and expand the scope of anti-racism legislation in Britain, and use our President-elect, Mrs. Thatcher's Community, beginning in July 1992, to press for Europe-wide equality legislation. Our aim will be that all EEC residents be treated on the basis of equality before the law.

£22,000 per year will pay a penny more in tax; 740,000 people will be taken out of tax altogether. And the new top rate of 50% will only apply to income over £40,000 per year.

People all over the country know it's time for change. They know that their own interests as well as the country's interests are best served by investment in our industry, by improvements in the Health Service, by fighting crime, and by building new homes.

The next Labour Government will strengthen and expand the scope of anti-racism legislation in Britain, and use our President-elect, Mrs. Thatcher's Community, beginning in July 1992, to press for Europe-wide equality legislation. Middle East. We are totally opposed to all forms of terrorism, from wherever they come.

We are alarmed at the outbreaks of antisemitism and racism in some European countries. Racism and antisemitism threaten the peace of communities and the process of democracy.

They condemn people to live in fear. Our opposition to racism is implacable, and our commitment to equality is strong.

The next Labour Government will strengthen and expand the scope of anti-racism legislation in Britain, and use our President-elect, Mrs. Thatcher's Community, beginning in July 1992, to press for Europe-wide equality legislation. Our aim will be that all EEC residents be treated on the basis of equality before the law.

improvements in education and training.

Education lies at the root of this country's future prosperity. The Jewish community has always put the education of its children as the highest priority, producing great success for large numbers of Jews in every walk of life.

So Liberal Democrats will make the investment. We believe that all children should receive nursery education between three and five.

There are also young people, up to the age of 19, should continue with education and training. We believe that education is the essential investment in the country's future and to make sure that the investment can be made, we have said that we are prepared to put a penny on the standard rate of income tax to fund this.

There are strong links between the Anglo-Jewish community and the Liberal Democrats.

There are many Jews in leading positions in our party and standing as candidates in this election. We also have many Jewish councillors throughout the UK. There is a very positive tradition of support for the Liberals for the Jewish community.

Our stand against racism and antisemitism is as strong now as it has ever been.

The Liberal Democrats opposed the Asylum Bill more effectively than Labour. The Conservatives have threatened to reintroduce this bill if they win the election.

At so many Jews know personally, Britain has been a haven from persecution in years gone by. I am determined that this should continue.

Antisemitism and fascism continue to rear their ugly heads in Europe. We are unfortunately not free of this disease in Britain.

Racism must be fought and conquered wherever it appears. As Jews must have the freedom to observe their religion as they have over the centuries since Abraham.

The Liberal Democrats will create new racial attacks squads to co-ordinate police action against racially motivated attacks.

We will encourage Europe's wide anti-discrimination legislation along the lines of the UK Race Relations Act.

We will introduce a comprehensive Bill of Rights to give every citizen full protection before the courts.

I know many British Jews have family and friends in Israel, and how much the future peace of the Middle East matters to the Jewish community.

I admired the courage of Israel's citizens during the Gulf war under attack from the scud missiles. International affairs do not stand still.

I hope that the current peace talks will produce long lasting peace in the Middle East and a guarantee of security for the state of Israel.

The Liberal Democrats have an active Friends of Israel association chaired by Clr. Monroe Palmer, our candidate in Hastings and Rye. Baroness Nancy Secor is its President.

Leader of the Liberal Democrats

THE economy will be the central issue in this election. And rightly so!

The Conservative government will continue to tell you that Britain's recession is part of the worldwide recession.

Of course, other countries around the world are suffering slow-down, but none started their downturn as early as Britain, nor have any gone down so low as Britain.

Japan's economy grew by four percent last year, and is forecast to grow again this year. In the USA the fall in domestic product was less than one percent last year.

If Britain had followed the same path as the USA, our national output would have been 10 billion higher than it was.

The economies of Germany, France and Italy actually grew this year. That's not to say that they have no problems — only that Britain's are worse.

The real question that all parties must answer is "Why is Britain suffering so badly?"

The Labour party will try to tell you that it is all the result of 13 wasted years of Conservative rule. The Tories tell us that everything is the fault of Labour in the 1970s.

But Britain's problem is not way to just 13 years of Tory misrule. It is the product of 40 years of failed government under both Tory and Labour governments.

There are deep-seated and fundamental issues to be addressed. A return to Labour would be a return to the past.

MESSAGES OF SUBSERVIENCE?

This is a page from the Jewish Telegraph of March 27th. In it the leaders of the Tory, Labour and Liberal Democrat parties take time off their campaigns to give assurances of their loyal support to the Jewish community.

VIOLENCE: A WAY TO STOP IT

An open letter to the Prime Minister, by COLIN VERNON

Dear Mr. Major,

Throughout the general election we received many assurances from you that the Conservatives stand for law and order. In your Manifesto you gave more than three pages to the subject. And yet we all know that after 13 years of Tory rule the ordinary citizen has never gone about his lawful business in greater peril. As one of those involved in the nationalist movement, I pose this simple question: When will you tackle the root causes of the fearsome violence that plagues our nation?

As you and your ministers know well, we have never advocated or condoned the use of violent behaviour either in the expression of some grievance or merely to make a point. And this is just as well because with muggers, drug-pushers, bombers, union bullyboys and other red rowdies, and now the latest addition — night-marauding cop-killers — your Home Secretary already has his hands fairly full. On the other hand, it must be admitted that we have never been all that good at turning the other cheek. Unlike the elderly citizens alone in their homes and bludgeoned to death for a few pounds, we have always believed that an aggressor is best repaid in kind — and preferably with interest.

To kick off, I would like to talk to you about what is quaintly termed 'racial attacks', which you refer to in your Manifesto where you say that: "We will continue to ensure that the full force of the law is used to deal with racial attacks." What is interesting is that you and your Government ministers, along with virtually all the other politicians of whatever party, only classify as a 'racial attack' an assault by a white person upon a member of the ethnic minorities, never the other way round.

We abhor gratuitous violence, but surely it is no more than fair to look at the facts. Thanks to years of 'trendy' teaching many of our young people are not so well educated as they should be. But they are not stupid. Their parents have told them how things once were in this country when just a tiny handful of coloured immigrants lived here. Now they see the violence that has followed the creation of multi-racial areas in Britain, and they know that a fearful crime has been committed against their tolerant race and nation. Now, Mr. Major, reflect if you will on this atmosphere of bitterness and frustration, and you will surely agree that an explosive situation has developed for which responsibility lies with you and others who have promoted the multi-racial society.

There is of course a brave and intelligent step which you could take tomorrow. This would be to get off your hind-legs in your talking shop in Westminster and announce to the nation that immigration — whether legal, illegal or refugee — is to be ended once and for all. Then, to the inevitable jeers and catcalls of the loonies and traitors ranked on the opposite side of the House, you could tell us of your plans to reverse the tide. But please note the need for courage — a trait markedly absent in your predecessors.

On the 'phone here, but will he listen to good advice?

You are, as I understand it, extremely perturbed by sectarian violence in Ulster. And, apparently, you are much more worried now that loyalists there have developed the capacity to hit back hard at IRA gunmen. I can appreciate your concern, but I would ask you to look back to one of the wilder lunacies of your predecessor. She, so it seems, actually believed that her precious Anglo-Irish Agreement would prove to be some sort of milestone on the way to permanent peace in Northern Ireland. In fact, as anyone with the slightest political common sense could have told her, that Agreement was a clear message to the IRA that its campaign of terror was working. The bombs and shootings were paying off because Britain was on the run!

The young men and women of Ulster are not stupid. They can plainly see the writing on the wall. They know that, as long as government policy remains unchanged, concession will follow concession until one morning they will wake up as citizens of the joke republic to the south of them. This, if things continue, will have consequences far more violent than anything you have yet seen in Ulster.

I can suggest a simple and sensible way of avoiding this escalation of violence that is developing as loyal Ulster people hit back at their enemies. We should stick that disgraceful Anglo-Irish Agreement under Eire Premier Reynolds' nose and then quietly tear it to shreds. After that we should tell him to make adequate preparations to take on board in his republic all those living north of the border who find it difficult to be loyal citizens of our United Kingdom.

Violence, Mr. Major, is reprehensible. But the kind of violence we have in this country is largely avoidable. By taking this bit of advice — which I doubt that you ever will — you could bring much it to an end.

Think about it anyway.

Yours sincerely
COLIN VERNON

and intelligence he was physically assaulted by a section of the university students to whom he intended to speak, and was prevented from delivering his address. It was these same young gentlemen who announced subsequently that they would smash the windows of any bookseller offering Eysenck's works for sale.

By a strange coincidence, it was shortly before the end of the year 1991 that Professor Eysenck was permitted half an hour of broadcasting time by the BBC. His talk was a brilliant exposition of the value and purpose of intelligence testing and of the need for the widespread use of such tests in schools in order to ensure that, whether they be applied to bright or dull children, those children be given the kind of education — academic or vocational — best suited to their individual needs. Such a system would of course ensure that gifted children were removed from the influence of moronic schoolteachers, and would therefore be considered odious by the students who assaulted Eysenck. Though these creatures have the audacity to consider themselves some sort of weird intellectual 'élite', they tolerate nothing that in their opinion savours of 'elitism'!

It is a sad situation in which a man of Eysenck's distinction and integrity is allowed only a single lecture in which to expound a remedy for much that is deplorable in our schools, whilst a series of six lectures are allotted to one who has little more to offer than useless information and ill-informed comment on matters of real importance. If in future the pseudo-intellectuals called on to deliver the Reith Lectures are required to endorse such theories as may be considered politically expedient by the BBC, we have real cause for concern. Such 'experts' have more in common with comedians than with scientists or philosophers, and Lord Reith would certainly not be amused.

LETTERS

SIR: In his article on sociologist lies, Mr. Hunt implies that truth abounded when this was a Christian country but not in this secular and pagan age.

I doubt that this was ever, in the majority sense, a Christian country. Also, who is to say how many in the country really did believe and how many just unthinkingly followed? As for egalitarianism, it must be said that it is the factions of the Christian church that are preaching this — so are the sociologists the only ones who are lying?

I do not understand those who think Christianity can save our race. It is a religion concerned with 'saving souls' and with world-domination — although the latter is put in other words. Numerically, Christianity has now passed from being a religion with a white majority among its followers to one with a non-white majority, and pronouncements from its hierarchy will increasingly show this bias — to our detriment. Our race will only be saved by those who put race first. A church that gladly marries Blacks with Whites, encouraging mulatto offspring, is obviously opposed to our salvation on earth.

A.S. PAULIN
Romford, Essex

SIR: I am a student at Middlesex Polytechnic, in North London. I am writing in order to give readers an insight into the bias and brainwashing to which new students are subjected by the overwhelming prevalence of red activists.

Only last year, eight weeks were lost because of an undemocratic 'occupation' whereby lefties took over the college with a small minority of imported bullyboy reds. No teaching took place during this period; much damage was caused; and ultimately nothing was achieved.

The method employed by such people is intimidation and often violence. Freedom of speech depends solely on whether or not you share their destructive far-left views. My college, as with most, has various ethnic clubs (Afro-Caribbean, Asian, etc.), but if I, as a British White, dared to propose the formation of a club for my own kind I would be branded as a 'racist' and would come under considerable physical threat.

Such hypocrisy is maddening, as I, and I am sure many like me, feel gagged by the constraints of a conspiracy to eradicate any pride in what is, after all, a great and proud culture — our own.

This letter has to be anonymous because I know that many red scum read your magazine for their own purposes, and if my name became known to them as one of your correspondents I would be in serious physical danger — somewhat hypocritical when you consider that the 'Anti-Nazi League' and its allies accuse the BNP of a political ideology based on violence!

I am proud to be white and proud to be British. If this is a crime then I am thankfully guilty, and always shall be. I hope that I have given you a useful insight into the depraved nature of college politics. I and many others like me will continue in the quiet effort to awaken a student population currently under the spell of manifestly destructive red politics.

A BRITISH NATIONALIST

SIR: A recent photo in The Guardian showed a group of Pakistanis in Southall going mad with excitement and glee at the Pakistani team winning the World Cup final cricket match against England. To me, this showed one thing: that these people's allegiance is not to this country but to Pakistan.

As these folk continually tell us that they are 'British' and that this is their country, and bearing in mind that Britain is providing them with so much that Pakistan cannot give them, one would have thought they should show some allegiance to England/Britain by cheering for our teams.

On the other hand, if the Pakistani team has first call on their loyalty why do they not return to Pakistan?

E. BRIGGS

SIR: According to recently published figures, the Jewish population of this country is slightly over three hundred thousand, so the Jewish community accounts for a good deal less than one per-cent of the total population.

However, on the front page of the Jewish Chronicle (21st February) we read that the then Home Secretary Mr. Kenneth Baker recently held a meeting with representatives of the Board of Deputies of British Jews and the Jewish Council for Community Relations to discuss the proposed Asylum Bill. The Jewish representatives want no strengthening of this country's immigration controls, the report said.

Can anyone remember when a Home Secretary had any such meeting with representatives of the ordinary British majority on such matters, let alone heeded their views?

J. KERRIGAN

SIR: I am a keen genealogist and have spent many hours at St. Katherine's House researching my ancestry. Recently I decided to take a look at the latest addition to my family line, the first offspring of a new generation.

Now most of my research has been in the 19th century volumes, and with my surname being Bentham my neighbours in the register were Benson, Bennett, Bentley, etc.

But to find my nephew the other day I had to wade through pages of Benaissa, Benakas, Benali, Benani, Ben Daoud, Ben Dhiarf, Ben Kalem, Ben Salah, Ben Salem, Bensetti, Bentaier, Ben Tarifite, Bentría, Benyagoub, Benyaattou, Benzimra, and so on and on.

Living in the capital, it is all too easy to feel a stranger in the land of your birth. This observation should indicate to any in favour of continued immigration that they are helping in the dispossession of our people.

so-called 'democracies' that have restricted debate of it and prevented politicians, political parties and governments acting in recognition of it. What those forces are, and why they function as they do, is a question which falls outside this study. The imperative here is that we accept the truth that has been decisively demonstrated in Los Angeles very recently, and that we refuse any longer to allow ourselves to be intimidated into ducking its consequences.

The consequences simply are that we must start now making plans to dismantle the multi-racial societies that are the products of this ghastly experiment, and to separate the races that quite clearly and manifestly cannot live together, work together and compete equally wherever the attempt has been made to merge them with one another.

In the longer term, there can only be one ultimate formula for this. The races must be segregated geographically by the resettlement of black populations in parts of the world where they will not come into contact with white populations and will not share the same citizenship and nationality. All arrangements which stop short of this solution must be regarded as strictly temporary ones and mere steps towards its achievement.

Considering the scale that black settlement has now attained in the White Man's homelands, particularly the United States, such transfers of populations constitute a task of colossal dimensions. No doubt that is why the undertaking is shirked by so many in positions of office, even including those who are prepared to admit, if only to themselves, that the multi-racial idea has been a big mistake. It is a reason why some of the more outspoken critics of immigration in Britain, like Mr. Enoch Powell, have never endorsed repatriation except on the very limited scale that would occur through the process being made voluntary.

But those who eschew such wholesale remedies as total repatriation and resettlement of Blacks consistently fail, when challenged, to propose alternatives that offer the slightest prospect of viability and effectiveness when the problem is measured by what happened in Los Angeles at the end of last month and what is happening, in lesser dimensions, all over those countries where the multi-racial experiment has been instituted.

When the harmful consequences of a policy attain dimensions of such vastness and destructiveness, and when all the portents for the future are that that vastness and destructiveness will only increase as time goes on, we have reached a point at which we must consider remedial measures which are vast and drastic in the upheaval that they will involve. So far, the political mind prevailing in the western democracies has not been up to this need. That mind, it would seem, simply is not adequate to embrace undertakings and challenges of the scale now facing us. Instead, it opts for small solutions that involve small expense, small trouble and small mental and moral adjustment — solutions which turn out in the end to be purely illusory, for they merely sweep the matter under the carpet, from whence it emerges again, a short time later, in even more lethal form.

If Whites of yet unborn generations are to be spared what happened in Los Angeles recently, there must be a revolution in our thinking. And it must come soon!

New Head of Admin appointed

LAST MONTH Mr. Alf Waite (pictured above) was appointed as the British National Party's Head of Administration. This is part of a reorganisation of the party carried out in the wake of the general election aimed at obtaining greater operational efficiency.

Alf Waite is a nationalist of long standing and proven record. He served during the 1970s as Organiser of the Bromley Branch of the National Front, which branch he took into the BNP after the split in 1980. He then made Bromley BNP one of the best branches in the country.

After a break from activities for a few years, he has now returned to take over direction of BNP head office, in which capacity he will be responsible for supervision of party records, membership enquiries and recruitment, correspondence, orders for literature and so on.

Rochdale

EXCELLENT 'DAY OF ACTION'

BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY activists, mainly from the North of England but with some reinforcements from the South and Midlands, held a highly successful 'Day of Action' in Rochdale, Lancs., on Saturday, May 2nd. The chief purpose of the day's activities was to campaign on behalf of Ken Henderson and David Taylor, standing as BNP candidates in elections to Rochdale Council on May 7th.

During the general election the party had suffered something of a setback when a similar Day of Action in Rochdale planned to replace an indoor rally banned by the Labour-controlled Council was made impossible by a combination of red opposition and police obstruction. The police in Rochdale, it must be realised, are entirely in the pockets of the Council and the ethnic minority groups which control the town, and as a result have always treated patriotic groups badly.

On May 2nd, as a result of much more thorough organisation and planning, the BNP activity in the town was well supported and both police and opposition were wrong-footed. The BNP party, over a hundred strong, assembled first over the county border in Todmorden, where no-one expected them. They then proceeded to Rochdale town centre in a demonstration of formidable strength which caused any opposition at hand to keep at a safe distance and confine itself to the occasional piece of verbal abuse from passing cars. An impromptu march with flags proceeded through the main shopping area, ending in a short rally in the forecourt of the magnificent Victorian Gothic Town Hall — a slap in the eye to the Council, if ever there was one. Ken Henderson was the main speaker, assisted by Peter Barker and National Activities Organiser Richard Edmonds, who had brought a team up from London for the day.

After the rally, the BNP group went to the two wards where the party's candidates were standing, the Smallbridge & Wardleworth and Balderstone wards. There they again manifested a strong presence and distributed large quantities of election leaflets. After this the group dispersed, with the objectives of the day achieved — to everyone's great satisfaction.

IN MEMORIAM

Violent storm

IT IS WITH SADNESS that we have here to record the tragic deaths of four young supporters of the British National Party from South Wales in a car crash on the M4 near Bristol on the 13th March. Three of the four, brothers Brian (24) and Darren Sheeley (18) and Paul Casey (24) were members of the well-known nationalist band Violent Storm, based in Cardiff. The fourth death was of Jason Oakes, a good friend of the band's members from Merthyr.

Thankfully, Billy Bartlett, Violent Storm's lead singer, survived and has recovered from his injuries.

The lads had been on their way to Spain for a nationalist music festival taking place in Valencia.

Violent Storm had built up a strong following among patriotic youth in South Wales and beyond, and many of those who followed the band were BNP members. The funeral of the Sheeley brothers in their home district of Ely, Cardiff, was attended by friends and comrades from places as far afield as Sunderland.

Whilst the four will be sorely missed it is hoped that a new band can be formed to continue the work of spreading the word of racial patriotism through music amongst white youth in Britain and elsewhere which they and Violent Storm began.

One thing is for sure. They will never be forgotten.

NEW VIDEO ON REVISIONISM

When Professor Robert Faurisson visited Sweden in March 1992, his friend Ahmed Rami produced this English language two-hour video, which now is shown in schools and universities in Sweden. The facts that Prof. Faurisson puts forward have already awakened many individuals to the case for revisionism.

The video is entitled Faurisson in Sweden, 1992, and can be ordered from: SVEAMAL, Asogatan 123b - Avd. 140, S-116 42 Stockholm, Sweden. The price is £15 (or equivalent currency) including postage. Please enclose cash only with your order.

SUPPORT FUND

Income from the sales of our magazine is not enough to cover production and administrative costs. We therefore rely on regular donations from our supporters so that we may remain solvent.

Because of the controversial nature of the opinions expressed in these columns, we have found it impossible to induce wholesale magazine distributors to handle our magazine. It is therefore not to be found on sale in high street newsagents or bookshops. Hence our need for additional financial support.

Please send all contributions to: PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW. Please note that receipts are not normally sent for donations of less than £10 unless specifically requested, in which case an SAE would be appreciated.
